Rev. P. A. Cave Will Address the Meeting.

The company presenting "The Christian" at the Academy last night was not an exceptionally capable one. The play was very poorly cast. Charles D. Coburn was not at all convincing or impressive as John Storm. He was not forceful in his portrayal of the character, and did not even look the part. There was too much of the juvenile about him to admit of one taking him seriously. Katherine Angus in her conception of Glory Quale did not grasp the opportunities afforded by the part. her conception of Glory Quale did not grasp the opportunities afforded by the part. Robert Dudley was decidedly week as Lord Robert Ure, and the Mrs. Callendor of Lillian Hunt was altogether colorless, and might as well have been done without dialect, so wretched was the attempt. Willis Henry Page, as Father Samplush, did the best work in the piece, and was the only one who seemed to be in any way fitted for the role assumed.
